Portland, Dec. 19.—Very few turkeys have reached this city for Christmas trade thus far, and commission men begin to think the market will be by no means overstocked. Reports of low prices expected here have had its effect of turning a large portion of the Southern Oregon product toward California, while producers in the Willamette valley and in Eastern Oregon have not been asking for quotations, as they were the week before Thanksgiving.

On the other hand, no demand is yet apparent for Christmas turkeys. The few dressed birds coming in are held at 18¢, and this price has not been considered an inducement by prospective buyers, who had been led to believe that turkeys would be 2¢ to 5¢ below Thanksgiving quotations.

Fancy creamery butter is firm, and in some instances city creameries are purchasing fancy stock on front street. They fresh eggs are coming in freely, but prices will probably be kept where they are until after the holidays.
